Time Lapse

Maria Noonan McDermott

Maria Noonan-McDermott is a visual artist and poet whose practice bridges painting, literature and lived experience. With 29 solo exhibitions and extensive national and international showings, her work has been widely exhibited across Ireland and abroad, supported by major arts funding bodies and recognised through residencies, awards and curated exhibitions in venues including The Hague, Beijing and Hamilton Gallery, Sligo.

Time-Lapse is a deeply personal body of work exploring memory, inheritance and the passage of time. Inspired by her poem of the same title, the exhibition reflects on the emotional imprint of objects, relationships and lived experience, weaving together painting and poetry to create a quietly powerful meditation on connection, resilience and what endures across generations.

Thursday 03 - Saturday 26 September

What Remains

Anushiya Sundaralingam

Born in Sri Lanka and currently living and working in Belfast, Anushiya is a graduate of Fine & Applied Arts from the University of Ulster and works across both personal practice and arts facilitation within public, private and health contexts. Originally trained as a printmaker, her practice has evolved into mixed-media and installation-based work incorporating both two and three-dimensional forms and is represented in numerous private and public collections.

Her work explores ideas of identity, belonging and displacement, responding to the shifting relationship between self and environment. Drawing on lived experience and cultural transition, she uses a layered, material approach to reflect the complexity of place, memory and transformation, with recent work engaging specifically with representations of women's identity within her cultural context.

Thursday 01 - Saturday 31 October

Print & Process

Omagh Printmakers

Omagh Printmakers is a collective of artists dedicated to exploring the rich and versatile medium of print. Established in 2019, the group provides opportunities for members to develop skills, share knowledge and exhibit work across a range of printmaking techniques, including etching, linocut, collagraph and Japanese woodblock print.

This exhibition brings together a selection of work from across the group, alongside examples and explanations of the processes involved. It highlights the breadth of approaches within the collective and reflects the importance of printmaking as a continuing area of creative practice within the local arts community.

Thursday 05 - Saturday 28 November

Beyond

Amanda Montgomery

Amanda Montgomery, originally from County Fermanagh, is based near Belfast and works in wide range of mediums including drawing, mixed media, sculpture and installation and utilising a variety of materials.

"My work focuses around the human condition, our strengths, our frailties and our place in nature. The materials and textures I use adapt accordingly to subject matter and site. I am currently concentrating on drawings and mixed media pieces focusing on images of natural world and our place in it. Many works will have a sense of place or past experience, somewhere we have been or know giving them a sensitive edge and a human element."
